Free Climate Change Lecture

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - A University of Nebraska-Lincoln professor will lecture on climate change and lead a panel discussion on Thursday.

The title of Donald Wilhite's Heuermann Lecture is "Understanding and Assessing Climate Change: Implications for Nebraska." It is scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m. and will be held at the Nebraska Innovation Campus Conference Center auditorium, 2021 Transformation Drive, in Lincoln.

The panel will include three more faculty members from UNL's Department of Earth and Atmospheric Sciences.

The Heuermann Lecture will coincide with the release of a report on climate change compiled by the UNL faculty members. Report copies will be available at the lecture and online afterward.

Heuermann Lectures are free and open to the public.
