2012 Nebraska Legislative Session Ends

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Nebraska lawmakers have ended a legislative session that includes child welfare reforms, tax cuts and the restoration of prenatal care for illegal immigrants.

Lawmakers adjourned Wednesday evening after overriding Governor Dave Heineman's veto of a bill to restore prenatal care for illegal immigrants and other low-income women.

The session was marked by uncertainty about the state's financial future and conflicts over the governor's plan to cut taxes. But it also included new investments for University of Nebraska medical facilities, and efforts to reduce truancy in schools.

Lawmakers also gave voters the option of approving legislative salary increases, expanding term limits, and placing hunting rights in the state constitution.
