In Marshall County*, unofficial results Tuesday night had voters turning down the renewal of a half-cent sales tax for Community Memorial Healthcare for an additional five years by an 8-vote margin, with 2,325 votes cast against continuation of the sales tax to 2,317 in favor

In Jefferson County*, voters in Jefferson County North USD 339 said yes to the proposal that $5.5 million in general obligation bonds be issued to fund a variety of facility improvements, ranging from school safety to HVAC and roof repairs, along with a Vo-Ag and tech classroom addition. Voters gave approval 368 to 359 to the proposal, which will require a 6.5 mill levy increase over a 30-year period to pay for the bonds and interest.

It was a different story for Jefferson West USD 340, as voters said no to a $21 million bond issue for facility improvements, voting 1,020 to 711, in opposition. Along with funding improvements and renovations to the elementary, middle and high schools, as well as the early childhood center, it would have been used to fund the construction of a multi-purpose facility connecting the high school and middle school.

Effingham voters, in Atchison County's Tuesday election, were deciding the fate of a proposed 1-cent sales tax to fund local projects and services.

According to the City of Effingham, approval of the sales tax would mean improved "economic vitality of the community" as well as infrastructure upkeep, including streets, sidewalks, parks, and updated sewer and water systems.

As of 10:00 Tuesday night, approval of the increase was leading the opposition 28 votes to 18.
